Excerpt: . . . determination, than her ardent daughter gathered it in the field of letters. Languages, algebra, mathematics, the arts and sciences--nothing came amiss to her; and if the mill of her understanding did not turn it all into grist, it was not from want of industry or diligence. But the chair of Gamaliel is not intended for woman; and, in her pursuit of abstractions, Miss Cramboy was too often carried away by the rapids of theory, bringing forcibly to mind the Roman Governors taunt to St. Paul, which, unjust in its first application, remains an imperishable memorial of the instability of human wisdom. Full of the sentiments manifested at the hermitage, Miss Cramboy, on reaching the house, followed Emily to her room, determined on a lecture. unbecoming to a young lady as blushing, and you are always doing it. Its nothing but a vicious habit. Now dont fling yourself in a chair, Emily--as if you were a bundle of clothes. One hand--the left if you please--sweep lightly behind your dress, so as to bring the drapery gracefully round, and then--on the edge of your chair, Emily--sit on the edge. Now you look as well again. --And Miss Cramboy, recovering her good humour, laid her hand caressingly on her pupils head. --But theres the bell. Make haste down, and whatever you do, dear, mind the proprieties. --And with these words, the governess sailed out of the room. This was really too bad of you, Emily, she said...
