Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from West-Indian Sketches, Vol. 1: Drawn From Authentic Sources; Punishment of the Maroons of Demarara; From Pinckard s Notes on the West Indies A second edition of Dr. Pinckard s Notes on the West Indies has recently made its appearance. No publication could be more seasonable. It exhibits the impression made on the mind of an intelligent and disinterested spectator, at first evidently prejudiced in favour of West-Indian manners, who has had an opportunity of seeing with his own eyes the real nature and effects of colonial bondage. It seems the more necessary to bring forward to the view of the public, at this particular time, a witness so respectable, and so far removed from any suspicion of partiality or party feeling, as Dr. Pinckard; since, in the warmth of the conflict on West-Indian subjects which is now carrying on, the colonial partizans appear disposed to deny the existence even of the most prominent features of their own system; for example, the practice of driving. We should as soon have expected to hear it denied that a nose formed a part of the human countenance, as that the practice of driving the Negroes at their work by the impulse of the cart-whip, was not generally prevalent in the West Indies. Exceptions from this common rule may doubtless be produced - so may men without noses: but from such rare examples it would be most obviously unfair to object to the general statement. The fact is - a fact capable of the clearest proof from the direct evidence, or the unavoidable concessions, of West-Indians themselves - that the Negroes in general labour under the lash, and are...
