Forward of left center a door, giving out into the general hall, where occasionally noises of tenants going to and fro on the stairs below can be heard. Bach of this door a little way, and against the wall, a cheap yellow bookcase filled with more or less shabby books, old magazines and papers. On the top of this bookcase, center, an old-fashioned wooden clock which ticks noisily whenever other sounds cease; to its right, facing it, a five-branch candlestick of brass containing half-burned candles. Right center, a window with a fire-escape giving into a court, and beyond this court the whitewashed wall and window of another apartment, obviously vacant.
