Down by the River: From Colorado to the Mississippi Delta, a Cultural Adventure in Teaching, Coaching, and Learning

By Bryce Hach

Seaboard Press. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 148 pages. Dimensions: 8.8in. x 5.9in. x 0.5in.

ABOUT THE BOOK: Having graduated from high school in Loveland, Colorado-Americas Sweetheart City-where he was quarterback and captain of the football team, president of his student body and prom king, Bryce Hach decided that he pretty much had public-school life figured out. Four years later, when he became a high school teacher and football coach deep in the Mississippi Delta, he discovered that he still had a lot to learn . . . This is a story about America, public schools, educational challenges, racial issues, poverty-and-wealth and radically differing lifestyles. Its also a story about warmth and friendship and how both the students and (especially) their novice teacher learned something new about each other and life. While a graduate student at Carnegie Mellon University, Bryce Hach decided, upon the advice of several professors, to write a memoir based on his experiences in the Mississippi Delta while working in the Teach For America program. This that story.

FROM THE BOOK: The school bus was horribly ancient. Holes on the bottom presented the road running under my feet and the bus headlights offered little visual safety after the...
